Dear Future Hubby,

All my life I have dreamed of my perfect, wedding, kids, and family. I have pictured my house and everything in it. I fantasize about all these things, but lately I have realized not all of these things will come true. I will not have the perfect kids, and there are bound to be flaws in my wedding and dream house. Most of all, my husband, you, might not be exactly like I want. But I make a pact right now that I will wait for you. I will not give myself fully to another person until marriage, until I'm with you. I hope that you too will stay a virgin until we are married and follow God's path so we have a good chance of surviving.

Secondly, I hope you are respectful. No matter what, I will be treated like a princess and nothing less. I will not put up with someone who disrespects me or does something harmful to me (physically, spiritually, or emotionally).

Third of all, I hope that you have good, Catholic morals. It will make our marriage much easier if we believe in the same things. It will be an amazing experience if we can pray together, go to Mass together, and have God in the center of our relationship. I am going to bring my kids up through the Catholic faith, and I hope you are there along the way to support that decision.

These are all the traits I picture you will have. One day I will meet you and see if you live up to my expectations; I cannot wait for that day.

I love you!

Your future wife,
